Civilization may be understood as a process that involves the growth of both culture and society, as well as the moral development and awakening of each individual member of a community. The ideas of rights and obligations begin with a single person, and then spread outward from there. Go through a process of formal crystallization thanks to a broader society that distributes, one after the other, the same but more nuanced set of rights and obligations to each participant in the society; member The state, which functions as the fundamental organizational component of every society.

This role of identifying individual rights is expected to be carried out by the system and responsibilities, and then redistributes around the community following the formalization of the process through going through the legislative, executive, and judicial processes, they were refined. However, growing anxiety can be attributed to the society's continued poor performance in a variety of areas. Realizing rights in an appropriate manner, as well as the role of the state in democratically recognizing such rights and responsibilities in a period marked by shifting neoliberal policies is of paramount importance.
